Helix tops coach's 200 wins with title

by Jason Williams

For the Grossmont League, Helix High School's CIF football championship won last week meant a break from several years without a East County team winning a title.

For highly respected Highlander coach Jim Arnaiz, the win was another high point to go along with the 200th win his team gave him this year.

The Highlanders and the coach also celebrated the 20th anniversary of the school's first CIF win in 1978 by bringing the trophy home again.

Arnaiz, who has been coaching at Helix for 26 years, said that being at the school so long was one of the reasons he reached the 200 plateau.

With that 200th-win stop along the road to the CIF championship, it meant that Arnaiz was one of only three coaches in the area who have accomplished such a feat.

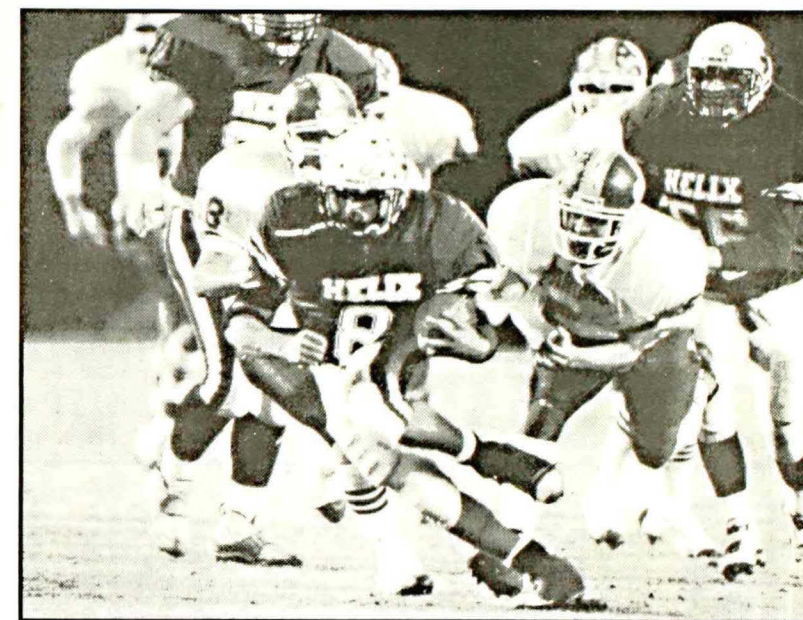

"It isn't anything you start out to do," said Arnaiz, "that you coach because you like to teach and be around kids with similar values."

"After you reflect and realize the scope - only three other coaches have done this, I feel like I'm part of a special fraternity."

Arnaiz said he could never have made it without the outstanding coaches, teachers and players which have contributed to his trek to 200.

He noted that he started his climb toward being a coach with 200 wins under his belt as a player in college at Cal Polly Pomona from 1958 to 1962.

He had played high school football as well, but was moved toward coaching during his years in college after playing for an assortment of inspiring coaches.

"I had a great experience in college with coaches who made football fun," said Arnaiz. "They made me realize I was there to get an education and football was a spin-off of that. I had a great time."

Before coming to Helix in 1969, Arnaiz was an assistant coach at Bishop Montgomery High School in Torrance, Calif.

Over the years, highlights have included the times Helix has won CIF, especially the first in 1978.

The coach said it was very special because it was the first and with a group of kids that were not supposed to win. He added that the team was seated last for the playoffs, number eight of eight.

Arnaiz said that it was special in another way as well, in that it was the last year in San Diego County where a team had to beat everybody. After that year, it broke up into IIA and IIAA, and then into divisions.

He commented that when you were CIF champion of everybody, it was something pretty special.

Arnaiz felt that it wasn't what he did, but about what all our coaches

Commentary

by Greg Eichelberger

Sniffing good movies

Rather than blather on about what a lying scoundrel Bill Clinton is or what spineless worms the Republicans in Congress are, I will use the little space allotted to me to write about something a little more positive, and in relation to the time and season. Anyone who has read my "award-winning" commentaries on "Oscar Shame (Parts 1 and 2)" knows that I am, above all, a big film buff.

Through diligence, hard work and not much of a life, I have managed to compile some 1,500 movies on about 525 video cassettes. I mean I have these things stacked all over the place. Ask my roommate, he'll tell you.

Anyway, it's especially fitting during the holidays to pull out my Christmas movies and watch them once again. While doing so recently, I discovered that there are some really emotional moments in some of these, old and new. So, as a change of pace from my usual Conservative fare, I thought I would present to you, as a gift, some of the best tear-jerking tidbits from some of my favorite motion pictures. They are offered in no particular order and they are not all holiday films, either.

First, from the 1946 Frank Capra classic, "It's A Wonderful Life," there are two. When old man Gower (the drunken druggist) slaps young George Bailey for not delivering the poisoned medicine, realizes his mistake and then tearfully embraces and apologizes to the boy.

The other occurs at the end when a grown-up Bailey (James Stewart) picks up a copy of a Mark Twain book given to him by his guardian angel Clarence, reads the inscription, and then tells his questioning wife (Donna Reed) that it was given to him "by an old and very dear friend."

Another lump-in-the-throat moment comes in 1947's "Miracle On 34th Street," when Oscar-winning Edmund Gwenn (playing Kris Kringle) is told that a little Dutch girl, adopted by an American family, would not be able to tell Santa what she wanted for Christmas. As soon as he begins to speak to her in her language, though, she lights up and begins to sing a song with him. The look on her mother's face (as well as a very young Natalie Wood peering on) is a priceless movie moment.

"Scrooge," the 1951 masterpiece starring Allister Sim, has a great tearful scene at the end when Scrooge humbly asks his nephew and wife if they can ever forgive a "foolish old man." The 1944 Best Picture winner, "Going My Way," has a pair - when Bing Crosby (Best Actor) sings "Too-la-roo-la-roo-la" to Barry Fitzgerald (Best Supporting Actor), and when Fitzgerald sees his mother for the first time in 30 years. Both of these are guaranteed to empty a box of tissues.

The conclusion of "The Miracle Worker" (1962), when Patty Duke (Best Supporting Actress) says "wawa" to her teacher, Anne Bancroft, also packs an emotional wallop. Another movie about a deaf-mute, 1948's "Johnny Belinda," also has a sequence like this when Lew Ayres explains to Belinda (Jane Wyman) in sign language how much he needs her.

But just in case the more "hip" readers are complaining, not all of these scenes take place in old black and white dramas. The 1986 comedy, "Peggy Sue Got Married," has a couple - when Kathleen Turner (Peggy Sue) goes back in time and picks up items from her bedroom in 1960, and when she talks to her (long-deceased) grandmother on the phone.

In "Big," from 1988, Tom Hanks make the audience sniffle along with him in a dingy, skid row hotel room, and in the 1992 film, "A League of Their Own," the concluding Hall of Fame reunion between Geena Davis and Virginia Madsen is quite moving. Even the frantic 1990 release, "National Lampoon's Christmas Vacation" contains a poignant scene where Chevy Chase explains why his poverty-stricken niece will have a great holiday this year, even if she's never had one before.

Tim Burton probably shed a few tears at the end of "Edward Scissorhands" (1990) or when Bela Lugosi (Martin Landau) died in 1994's "Ed Wood," and who could resist a few more at the end of "Goodbye, Mr. Chips" (1939), "The Pride Of The Yankees" (1942) or "The Last Picture Show" (1971)?

More recent pictures like "The Color Purple," "Rain Man," "Field of Dreams," "Eight Men Out," "Schindler's List," "Forrest Gump," and "Titanic" have several of these Kleenex* moments each, none bigger, I suppose, than in the latter film when Kate Winslet lets go of a dead Leonardo deCaprio's hand, promising him she will survive, as he sinks below the surface.

But, the biggest tear-flowing moment of all, without a doubt (for me, anyway) has to be when Tommy Kirk is forced to shoot his best friend and pet dog who has rabies in the 1957 Disney classic, "Old Yeller." Anyone who did not cry at this scene needs to undergo sensitivity training - film sensitivity training, that is.

Helix

Over the years as a head coach, Arnaiz has watched players and staff come and go, and has said coaching and the players have not changed so much as the world around them.

"I don't think the players have changed all that much. Their personal lives have changed," said Arnaiz.

He added that the good players you have are no different than 25 years ago, they just have more stress and confusion in their lives.

He commented that the 1998 CIF champion Highlander team is very comparable to the 1978 team in that both teams were considered underdogs going into the championships and both came from a rocky season.

The beginning of the season was not consistent. The Highlanders would have a good game, and then the next week play terrible. They started out 1-1-2, and then went to 2-2-2.

He said that individually the 1998 players were not the most talented, but they were one of the best teams, and that at some point they really clicked and came together in the final four. That's what you got to do.

The players contributed to the winning season by taking it upon themselves to make it happen.

According to Arnaiz, a coach can try to steer and direct a team, but at some point the players have to focus, since there is no magic in Xs and Os, only the players are the magic.

He quoted one of his coaching mottoes. "The line-up doesn't matter - they decided to become the magic."

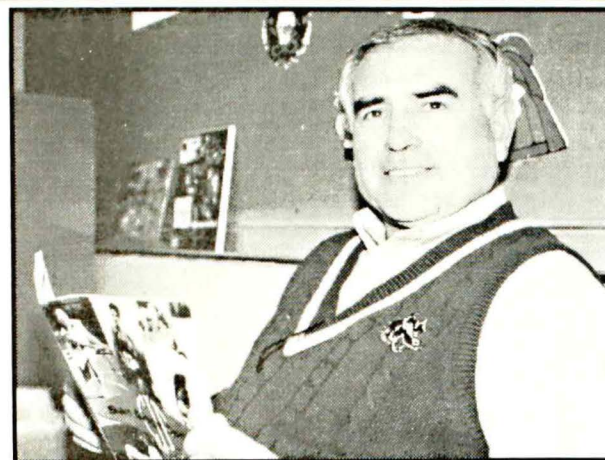

Arnaiz was also unsure as to why this team made it all the way, but said that after the team's win over Monte Vista in double overtime the players came alive and were unstoppable.

He commented that they believed they could continue to win, and just did an incredible job of coming together, clicking and making things happen."

As for the title game, there was not a lot of time - no time to practice, commented the coach.

The Highlanders played Thursday in the semifinal, then took Friday off to recuperate. Saturday brought rain and Sunday was an off-day. Monday was pre-game and Tuesday was right there on top of them before they knew it.

He noted that the team went through a lot of strategy preparation and review with basically no actual practice time.

It does not sound like the recipe for a championship win, but obviously it worked.

When asked if he would have done anything differently, he said, "Absolutely not. How do you argue with success?"

The players came to the stadium thinking they could win. After their win against Castle Park in the semifinals, the Highlanders had no doubts.

They went out onto the field calmly, and even though Chula Vista scored quickly in the first quarter, the team did not panic.

The Highlanders simply said, "Business as usual."

Helix scored on its second possession but missed the field goal, leaving Chula Vista still in the lead 7-6.

In the second quarter, senior running back Jason Van brought the Highlanders into the lead.

"I am obviously very pleased for them; a bunch of the kids on the team who worked very hard," said Arnaiz.

He added that he hoped they each take away, not just from the game, but from the season, and realizing that you can stumble and fall, and make mistakes, but the key is getting up, dusting off and dealing with adversity."

He said he walked away with a lot of satisfaction that the kids finally came together and that the coaches never stopped teaching, regardless of what the previous game was like.

He noted that in any season, to do what we did, you have to have committed players and dedicated coaches and then sprinkle all that with luck.

He added that sometimes the best teams don't always win, and that's the truth.

OLPH wins parochial flag football championship

Our Lady of Perpetual Help (OLPH) Junior Varsity football team won the San Diego Parochial School Athletic Flag Football League championship over Saint Jude Junior Varsity by a score of 21-12 on Nov. 22.

OLPH had tied for third with Madeline behind Saint Jude and Blessed Sacrament during the regular season.

In the playoff tournament held the weekend of Nov. 21-22, OLPH defeated All Hallows, Blessed Sacrament and Saint Jude to become league champions.

The team slogan is "Together Everyone Achieves More in Christ," or TEAM in C.

This team truly epitomized its slogan with total team effort, not only throughout the season, but especially during the three-game playoffs, said coach Ed Horning.

OLPH featured an outstanding offensive line in Matt Weichberger, Patrick Bristow, Danny Myers, Mike Pousson and William Breisacher. Behind their blocking, Jonathan Mata found plenty of room to run once through the hole or around the corner.

Coach Sean Sayre said that Mata used his quickness and graceful side-to-side moves to lead the team in rushing and scoring, and that D.J. Hensen, with deft ball-handling at quarterback and crisp passing led a high-powered, stop-us-if-you-can, offense.

Horning added that tight end Matt Weichberger made spectacular scoring catches throughout the weekend. Scott Ward chipped in with a clutch back-of-the-end-zone catch for a touchdown against Saint Jude.

According to the coaches, the real spark-plug for OLPH was team captain Nick Olsen, lead blocker for Mata, literally left defenders on the ground after one of his many crushing blocks. Olsen also plays linebacker on the defense with Mata.

They, along with defensive ends, John O'Neil and Danny Myers, who made some great defensive plays. A sparkling interception by John O'Neil shut down some of the most powerful offenses in the 15-team league.

Head Coach Ed Horning and Assistant Coach Sean Sayre said they were proud to have been involved with a great group of boys and deserving champions, and that, over all, it took a TEAM in C. effort. The back-up players were very supportive throughout the tournament.
